Management POP™

Identify the best candidates for specific management roles and cultures.

Until now, selecting the right people for management roles has been fraught with problems. Making the wrong decision has broad and deep implications for the entire organisation. Whether selecting from external candidates or from internal ones where you even “know” the candidate, there is always the potential for a mistake.

The mistake just doesn’t impact the individual and their career options and potential. It impacts the team that they are given to lead, and that team may adversely impact other teams that they engage with across the business. It might even extend to externals with whom they engage, who might also feel the effects of that wrong decision.

It is therefore reassuring to know that support for your selection and decision is now easily and readily available. You can now rely on the Management POP™ as your psychometric assessment tool that fills the essential role of integrating science with the recruiting, selection, and development of managers from entry level to senior executive positions.

The Management POP™ assesses self-management potential, motivational structure, organisational fit, people orientation, leadership style, learning needs, communications style, approach to training, emotional intelligence and many other key factors found in managers in the very diverse world of management.

Many leading businesses use Management POP™ as part of their selection, development, and coaching process.

Management POP™ also provides insights into training, development, and coaching needs.

The Management POP™ is thoroughly validated and follows ADA and EEOC guidelines. The format is easy to follow and, as with all our assessments, no certification is required to interpret the reports.
